- A threat actor named 'IntelBroker' began leaking the data for Weee! on the Breached hacking and data breach forum.
- The statement said that the company does not retain customer payment information and as such was unaffected.

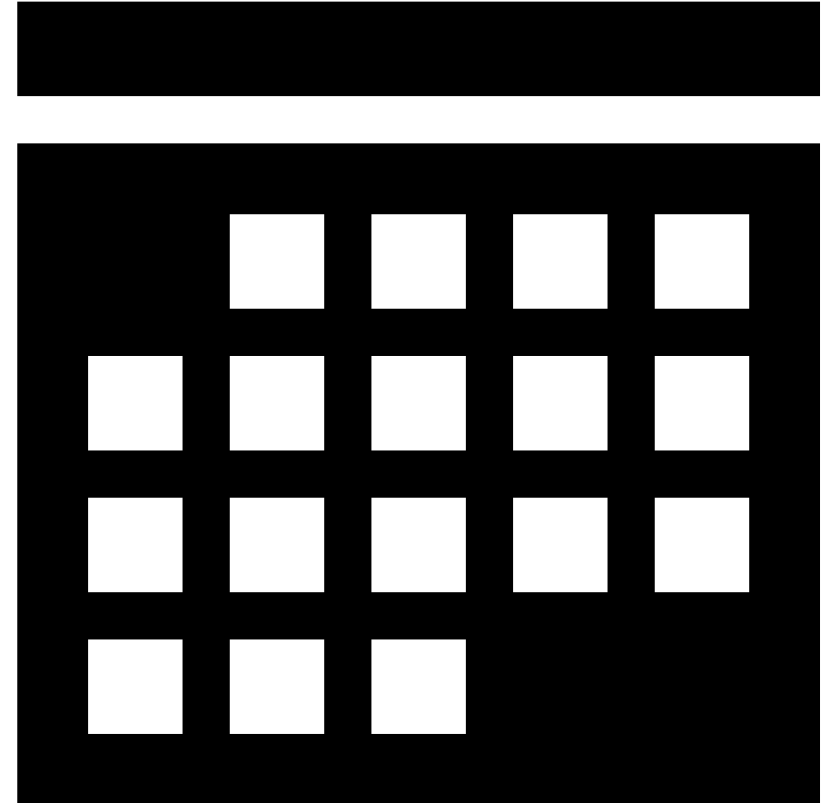

SIZE OF EXPOSURE AND AFFECTED SIDES

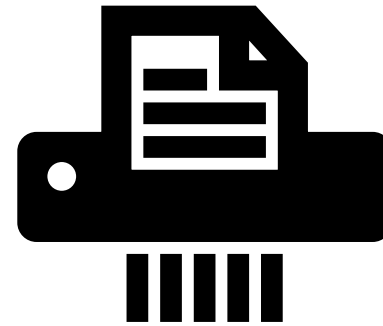

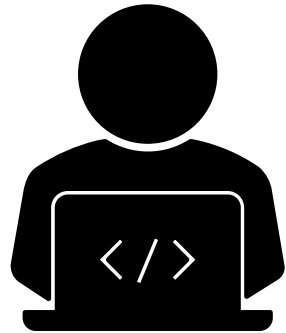

- The Weee! Food delivery service got 1.1 million users data leaked.
- In a brief statement, the company said that cybercriminals stole the name, address, email address, phone number, order number and order comments — such as where to drop off or leave orders.

LENGTH OF A BREACH

- The Weee! data breach specifically impacted customers who placed an order with the company between July 12, 2021, and July 12, 2022, according to a statement Weee! provided.
- Weee! released statement that the breach has happened in first week of February in 2023.

WHAT COULD'VE BEEN DONE TO PREVENT BREACH

Breach of the Weee! app happened in a way that the attacker broke into their database and collected information for millions of orders.

Attack could've been prevented by SSL encryption, using prepared statements, regularly monitoring logs...

CONSEQUENCES

- Customers are complaining about getting fishing emails, scam calls, messages and worrying that their information is being used for something that they don't know about.
- Weee! also lost number of users, which also lead to the decrease of company's value.

Experienced some spam messages before but not many. But they may sell our info to scammers. The scammer said (in Chinese) he is the manager in T-Mobile and someone used our info to open a phone number to spread illegal messages. Then he transferred us to fake local police, where they ask our name, id number. etc. They type these into their system, and generate a report saying that we are involved in a complicated international financial crime. They scared us that our bank accounts and status here will be freezed.

My personal info has been sold to dark web by Weee. Everyday I'm very frustrated dealing with scam calls and fishing emails, EVERY SINGLE DAY.
